

ANNIE LEIBOVITZ: WOMEN

ANNIE LEIBOVITZ: WOMEN is a unique exhibition featuring more than 60 portraits by the internationally renowned photographer. The exhibition is a celebration of the American Woman at the dawn of the new millennium and includes portraits from a broad spectrum of society. This evocative collection represents all women, from those recognized portraits of Betty Ford, Gloria Steinem, Toni Morrison and Justice Sandra Day O'Connor to images of a farmer and her daughter, coal miners, artists and many more working women. "I'm very moved by the sense of dignity these women have," say Leibovitz.

The exhibition is drawn from the photographs in the book Women published by Random House in 1999. The book contains more than 100 of these wonderful portraits as well as an essay by the novelist and critic Susan Sontag. Both book and exhibition create a vivid and complex collective image of women in the twenty-first century.
